

CRIME DOESN'T PLAY.

Sell or rent counterfeit Nintendo cartridges and you could go to jail.

This year alone, dozens of people in the U.S. and Canada have been arrested for selling or renting counterfeit game cartridges. Hundreds more have been sued and face fines up to $100,000 per violation. Countless others are under investigation and will be prosecuted.

Nintendo wants to stop those dealing in counterfeit games. It's unfair to all the honest video dealers, programmers and game players. And be assured, if you're caught with these pirated cartridges, you'll be prosecuted to the full extent of the law.

So be on the lookout for phony-looking cartridges, those with misspelled titles, non-English text or multiple games on a cartridge. Because when it comes to video piracy, we're not playing games.
